Rivka Dori = Secretary

For over forty years I have been involved with language education {L1 (first language), L2 (second/Heritage language), and foreign language} in many educational settings. I am interested in both, the theories of language acquisition, as well as, the practice of language acquisition. Fortunately, my work at the Hebrew Union College and the University of Southern California has enabled me to inquire, experiment, and teach in these areas. I became aware of the power of languages as markers of group affiliation, as integral part of people's self-identity, and as an agent for diversity and tolerance. I believe that the success or failure of Hebrew Education outside of the State of Israel depends on both, attitudes towards Israel and its culture, as well as, on successful approaches, methods, programs, and techniques. I recommend that Hebrew language educators adopt the Learners' Centered approach to language education in order to explore their students' attitudes and specific needs, and to adopt the Proficiency approach. One additional area Hebrew language educators need to explore is the new emerging technologies and their effect on language education.

Mendy Groner = Treasurer

Mendy built a specialized, commercial studio in Cape Town, partnering with Moonlighting Films - the South African company responsible for films like, Ali starring Will Smith, Blood Diamond starring Leonardo DiCaprio, 10,000 BC directed by Roland Emmerich and Invictus starring Morgan Freeman and Matt Damon and directed by Clint Eastwood. Mendy then founded a production company specifically to produce feature films for a global audience that have strong commercial appeal while at the same time foster greater understanding between different cultures, people and religions of the world.
